JENNY FORKS

matte 17.20

IN SEPTEMBER OF 1999, 18-year-old Jenny Forks was held at knifepoint by her 2-month old baby's biological father, forced onto the bottom level of a bunk bed and sexually assaulted while he laughed manically, interspersing with death threats throughout. In that moment, Jenny dug deep, found a strength that goes far beyond herself, she fought back and broke free. It would be the second, and last, time he tried to kill her.

Today, Jenny Forks leads her company, J.Forks Designs — a lifestyle women's boutique with a jewelry and graphic tee shirt manufacturing company out of Boerne, Texas that is carried in over 450 stores, in six countries — into new heights. Her daughter (the two-month-old baby) is now the manager of the boutique and lead graphic designer. When Jenny speaks, she shares exactly how she came through the horrific obstacles that would have crushed a lesser person with a passion and joy that is contagious to her audiences.

JENNY'S PRESENTATION

By 18 years old, Jenny Forks experienced firsthand how people are fallible. Raised in the church, she struggled when she became pregnant. Many people in her church turned their backs on her, her school board tried to abolish her, and she discovered that many of her once-considered friends were unreliable acquaintances. But, she was able to find strength through her faith which gave her the courage to push past stereotypes and terrible expectations.

Jenny seeks to impress hope in listeners through sharing her stories.
